Introduction

In 1973, at the outset of my postgraduate research into Scottish Presbyterian missionaries, I bought numerous packs of 10" x 8" lined index cards and named one for each of the 1500+ individuals listed in the churches' staff lists from 1873 to 1929, the period to be covered by my thesis. Some weeks later I was puzzled when one of my supervisors commented that I was obviously adopting a Namierite approach to history. A considerable time elapsed before I made the connection with Sir Lewis Namier's innovative history of the eighteenth century British Parliament, based on detailed biographical information for every member, gathered from a wide range of sources.

When I arrived in New Zealand in 1989 I met a kindred spirit in the shape of Rex Wright-St Clair. Rex had spent more than three decades collecting data on more than 3000 men and women who had begun practising medicine in New Zealand between around 1840 and 1930.

We quickly established we had adopted similar methodologies, utilising what public health officials used to described as "shoe-leather detection" when they were in search of the locus of an outbreak of infection. In other words, we had to travel to the sources and tease out the information by means of painstaking and time-consuming attention to detail. It was not a pursuit for the faint-hearted or those without stamina and determination.

Rex continued to refine and expand his dataset until just before his death in 2005. His willingness freely to share this information was a hallmark of his generosity; many New Zealand medical historians and graduate students have already paid tribute to Rex's assistance with their researches.

As with all works of this nature, there can never be a definitive version. Rex's work has to be seen as a snapshot taken at a one point in time. Fresh evidence will always come to light, more especially following the exponential growth of genealogy and family history over the past two decades. Rex would be the first to admit that he never tapped into the internet as a source of additional data. There is now a wealth of information to be found online, but none of these searches would be accessible to researchers without Rex's original trail-blazing.

In 2003, Rex Wright-St Clair completed this monumental work, "Historia Nunc Vivat", which he described as his "Magnum Opus". Although copies of this remarkable printed work can be found in a few libraries it has not been readily available for researchers throughout New Zealand. In 2012, I felt compelled to digitise the book to make it available for online research, retaining Rex's original format. Where errors of fact have been detected - they were scanty - they have been corrected: if I have introduced errors, I plead forgiveness.

Rex's wife, Elizabeth, graciously gave permission for his "Magnum Opus" to be made available as an online resource. I am grateful to Drs Derek Dow and Peter Rothwell for the willing assistance and guidance they gave me to make this come to fruition.

Rex Earl Wright-St Clair

Rex Wright-St Clair, who did so much to promote the study of medical history in New Zealand, died in his sleep at Auckland on 17 February 2005 after attending the opening session of the 9th Biennial Conference of the Australian Society of the History of Medicine.

This was the first occasion on which the Society had visited New Zealand and it is a source of deep regret that Rex died just hours before the AGM, when the members voted to change the name of the Society to the Australian and New Zealand Society of the History of Medicine.

Rex was born in Hamilton on 3 September 1922. The grandson of a Maori Land Court interpreter, he never lost his Waikato roots. Dux of Hamilton High School in 1940, he then entered the Otago Medical School, graduating MB ChB in 1947.

Other than a brief interlude as a locum in Auckland, Rex spent the whole of his professional career in his native Hamilton, working for two decades as a sole practitioner GP until a stroke encouraged him to embark on a new career as a medical administrator, initially as assistant medical superintendent of Waikato Hospital and then as medical superintendent of the Waikato Hospital Board Community Health Service from 1977–1988.

When Rex committed to any venture it was for the long term. Nowhere was this better exemplified than in his contribution to The Order of St John. Starting in the Cadet Division, he became a divisional surgeon in 1949 and was admitted to the Order as an officer in 1962. In 1977, he was promoted to be a Knight of Grace and in 1982 was reclassified as a Knight of Justice. In addition to his medical work for St John, Rex published a history of the Order's work in New Zealand (1977) and an extensively revised second edition in 1985.

Over the last 50 years of his life, Rex also had a second career—for it was far more than a hobby—as a medical historian. During this time, he produced in excess of 50 publications, ranging from short vignettes to his award-winning book, Thoroughly a Man of the World: A Biography of Sir David Monro MD (1971). The first of these publications, an article entitled The beginnings of medical registration in New Zealand, appeared in the NZMJ in 1955. The last, an essay on Dr AS Thomson for a forthcoming international dictionary of medical biography arrived on my desk in December 2004. As ever, it was carefully crafted and eloquently phrased, requiring a minimum of editorial interference.

Rex's contribution to medical history extended far beyond the written word. He organised New Zealand's first international medical conference in 1987, a bold move which inspired two sequels, in 1994 and 2005. Even a cursory glance through Rex's meticulously ordered correspondence files reveals how much assistance he offered freely to other medical historians, in New Zealand and overseas. He will be sadly missed, though his legacy of published work will ensure he will not be forgotten.

PREFACE

History is made by people and the history of medicine in New Zealand was made by those who practised it here. By far the greatest number of those practitioners in the early days had learned their medicine in Great Britain: in Scotland, London or Dublin. The medicine which, in time, developed in New Zealand was a product of British medicine.

In this work are listed alphabetically all medical practitioners known to have been in New Zealand between 1 January 1840 and 31 December 1930, whether registered here or not, providing at least one forename is known. They include medical officers known to have served with the British armed forces in New Zealand.

Charlatans and quacks are not included, but those who practised as doctors and were generally so regarded by the general public are included, even if unqualified. They may have done an apprenticeship with a doctor, the traditional method of training which began to decline after the Apothecaries Act, 1815, but lingered on even after the Medical Act, 1858, which brought medical registration to the United Kingdom.

Some who were born in New Zealand, but qualified and practised overseas, are included if they represented New Zealand in some official capacity, if they gained a degree from the University of New Zealand in any subject before going overseas, or if they died before they could return to New Zealand. At the end point, the following are included:

Those who qualified MB ChB NZ in 1930, even if registered later; and

Those who gave notice of their intention to apply for registration in the New Zealand Gazette by 31 December 1930.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I thank the numerous people who have helped me with my researches, especially librarians. In the Royal Society of Medicine Library in London, I have spent many happy days seeking and often finding information. The historical librarian at the Royal Australasian College of Physicians in Sydney was a great help. I was given free access to the Provincial Gazettes in the General Assembly Library in Wellington. I acknowledge the courtesy and assistance I was given by former staff of the Medical Council of New Zealand and by two former Registrars-General of Births, Deaths and Marriages.

Fellow practitioners who have helped with specialized knowledge of early doctors in particular areas include: Barry Dallas of Greymouth, Alan Hayton of New Plymouth, Dick Rawstron of Palmerston North and Geoff Gordon of Kaikoura. Laurie Gluckman shared many findings from his searches of Auckland newspaper files. David Macmillan of Christchurch did the same for his searches of the informative "Lyttelton Times". Descendants of many of the practitioners have given me useful information. Such a work as this can never be complete and there are always further data to be added. I have not read local newspaper files, which would no doubt have been informative, but which would be a colossal undertaking. I have included such information when it has come to my notice.

I especially thank Peter Rothwell of Hamilton, who read the whole work and made a number of helpful suggestions.

INTRODUCTION

Advances in Medicine

Just under a quarter of a century separated the end of the long-drawn-out Napoleonic Wars, with the final defeat of Napoleon in the Battle of Waterloo in June 1815, from the establishment of the Colony of New Zealand with the signing of the Treaty of Waitangi in February 1840. Sir Douglas Robb wrote:¹

“The years preceding 1840 had seen the beginning of great mental activity throughout Europe. Men’s spirits had revived after the great wars, and science and medicine were entering upon a century of amazing progress. The foundations of bio-chemistry were laid in this period with the demonstration of hydrochloric acid in the stomach (Prout 1823) and the preparation in the laboratory of urea (Wohler 1828), a substance thought hitherto to be peculiar to the activity of living things The beginnings of comparative anatomy (Cuvier), embryology (Von Baer), and histology or microscopic anatomy (Scheilden, Swann, and Kolliker) also belong to this period.”

The quarter century following 1840 saw great progress in the infant colony. The major settlements were all established by 1865, the wars against the Maori were almost at an end, gold had been discovered in Otago and New Zealand, especially the South Island, was on a great wave of prosperity.

That same period saw a revolution in fundamental beliefs in medicine and science. Anaesthesia was introduced in 1846. Rudolf Virchow’s book, Cellular Pathology, published in 1858, shifted the emphasis from diseased organs to their constituent cells. It was called by a standard authority, “one of the most important books in the history of medicine.”² Charles Darwin’s Origin of Species, credo of the biologist, was published in 1859. Louis Pasteur, founder of the science of microbiology, and Claude Bernard, pioneer in experimental physiology, were publishing their work at the same time.

Into that scientific ferment grew the roots of New Zealand medicine. The Otago Medical School had its beginnings in 1875, only eight years after Joseph Lister’s revolutionary work on antiseptics was published. The New Zealand Medical Association (NZMA), which later became, for 70 years, the New Zealand Branch of the British Medical Association, was founded in 1886. Its organ, the New Zealand Medical Journal, came into being in 1887, which year also saw the first medical graduate take his degree from the University of New Zealand. Thus was a distinctively New Zealand medicine founded.

Practice in New Zealand

Elsewhere I wrote:³

“The primitive society of the new colony had only a limited use for doctors. The population consisted of the indigenous Maoris who, although they had been afflicted with the white man’s bacteria, were on the whole suspicious of white man’s medicine, and immigrants, mostly of British stock, who had come through the rigours of five or six months under sail across stormy seas A young, healthy, impecunious, hard-working people imbued with Victorian fatalism towards child mortality gave little employment to doctors, and a population thinly scattered over the country in small settlements separated by mountainous and heavily forested terrain was not conducive to easy practice.

3. Wright-St Clair R.E. The Edinburgh influence in New Zealand medicine. In: Proceedings of the 23rd International Congress of the History of Medicine, 1912: 748

“The immigrant doctor, however, had his sound classical education and usually a little money behind him. In the colonial community with no aristocracy of birth to form its ruling class and where the landed gentry were too busy with their sheep to form a leisured class, the doctor became a natural leader and many of them proved to be very able politicians.”

The Doctors

The doctor was frequently a justice of the peace and sometimes resident magistrate. He was often coroner until the law banned doctors in practice from that office. Quite often he was registrar of births, deaths and marriages. He might fill all those posts and perhaps also be a member of a provincial council or the General Assembly, as the colonial parliament was called.

Some qualified doctors were farmers or merchants, practising no medicine or merely a little on the side. Many came in the gold-rush, more interested perhaps in the possibility of making a fortune than in medical practice. When the gold failed to materialize and the adventure turned sour, some “put up their shingles” and eked out a precarious living caring for the sick and generally impecunious diggers. Others moved on to Australia, South Africa or California, or else they returned to the “Old Country” and settled down to a staid steady practice.

Some came for the sake of their health, especially those who were “consumptive” or “phthisical”. The long sea voyage, followed by the mild New Zealand climate, were sometimes helpful in promoting a return to good health. There were drunkards and opium addicts among the immigrant doctors, failures and misfits. Some flitted briefly across the New Zealand scene before going on elsewhere to obscurity or occasionally to eminence.

The bulk of the practitioners gave long, dedicated but unspectacular service to small communities in the back-country or the larger towns. All covered wide areas, travelling on horseback in all seasons over terrible roads or no roads at all, fording unbridged rivers and operating on kitchen tables by candlelight. The people may have loved them, but they received little public credit and few honours.

Unfortunately, some of the scalliwags of the profession have the longest entries herein, because they received the most publicity. That is the way of the world! On the other hand, an entry of two or three lines may represent a professional lifetime of unsung and dedicated service to the local community.

Medical Reform

Reform and regulation of the medical profession were major topics of political discussion in Britain and in the medical journals of the mid-nineteenth century. Bills for the registration of qualified medical practitioners were introduced to the House of Commons almost annually through the 1840s and early 1850s. Some were sponsored by Thomas Wakley, MP MRCS, a member of Parliament and also the fiery proprietor and editor of The Lancet, a leading medical journal then as now. The sixteenth such bill passed into law in 1858. It set up a General Medical Council (GMC) and the first British medical register was published in 1869. They must have had a busy day on 1 January 1859, judging from the number of names entered in the medical register on that date.

Provincial Registration in New Zealand

It was probably an unsuccessful, but widely publicized, bill in Britain which stimulated a successful move in New Zealand. Alfred Domett, an English lawyer and minor poet, friend of Robert Browning and literary dilettante, was colonial secretary for the Province of New Munster under New Zealand’s first constitution of 1846. The colony was then divided into two provinces, New Ulster in the north and New Munster, which comprised all of the country south of the mouth of the Patea River. At that time, the settlement of Nelson was the only one in the South Island.

In 1849, the Legislative Council of New Munster held its first session in Barrett's Hotel, Lambton Quay, Wellington, presided over by Lieutenant-Governor J.E. Eyre, former Australian explorer. The Council included two medical practitioners from Nelson, Drs David Monro and John Danforth Greenwood. Domett introduced a bill which passed into law as the Medical Practitioners Ordinance. It did not make registration compulsory, but the name of the first registered practitioner was gazetted in January 1850. Over the next 17 years, until the Ordinance was superseded by colonial legislation, more than 160 doctors were registered under its provisions. Unfortunately, there was no comparable legislation in the Province of New Ulster, though an attempt in Auckland Province came close to success.⁴

A new constitution for New Zealand was proclaimed in 1853. In place of the two provinces, it divided the country into six provinces: Auckland, Taranaki, Wellington, Nelson, Canterbury and Otago. The ordinances of New Ulster and New Munster continued to operate in their respective areas unless specifically repealed by new provincial laws. In the former New Munster area, only Wellington and Otago adopted acts governing medical registration.

Wellington's 1854 Act was the only provincial legislation which required publication of a medical register. The Otago Act had a chequered career, the original version being dis-allowed by the Governor. The Otago register itself exists in manuscript form in the Hocken Library, but it was mutilated by none other than Dr T.M. Hocken, historian and secretary of the Otago Medical Board, to form a personal press-cutting book. Pages were cut out and others were hidden under pasted press cuttings. Sacrilege!

Colonial Legislation

The first Medical Practitioners Bill was brought before the General Assembly in 1860. Opposition came largely from the numerous and vocal supporters of homoeopathy in the House of Representatives. After long debates, which make excellent reading in the Parliamentary Debates (Hansard), the Bill lapsed on a technicality. Nothing further happened until 1867, when a bill was passed making medical registration compulsory for all doctors in practice.⁵

One clause of the Medical Practitioners Act, 1867 laid down that anyone who was in medical practice in New Zealand prior to 1857 was entitled to registration, regardless of qualification. That roused great controversy since it seemed to condone quackery. Eleven men (there were no women in medicine in New Zealand at the time) registered under that clause. Two of them were actually qualified and the rest had had training and were accepted as doctors by their local communities.

The first medical register under the Act was published in the New Zealand Gazette in December 1868. It contained 181 names. The Medical Board established by the Act was abolished by an Act of 1869 which came into effect on 1 January 1870, putting registration into the hands of the Registrar-General of Births, Deaths and Marriages. The first Registrar-General, J.B. Bennett, who was still in office then, was a former medical practitioner who never registered. Although this was not required by the Act, Bennett re-registered all those already on the register as of 1 January 1870. That date remained on the register thereafter as their date of registration, which is erroneous, and herein I stick to the date of their actual registration under the 1867 Act.

In the absence of a medical board, the 1869 Act required candidates for registration to lodge evidence of their qualifications with the local registrar of births, deaths and marriages and to publish in the Gazette a notice of their intention to apply for registration one month before their application to be registered was made. That was to allow time for their evidence of qualification to be examined by the public and that requirement remained until 1950.

5. Wright-St Clair RE. Medical registration in New Zealand. NZMJ 1977; 85: 153-56

A Medical Board was re-established by the Medical Practitioners Act, 1914, and was retitled Medical Council in 1924. Practitioners notified as dead were always deleted from the register, but for the first time the 1914 Act gave power to delete the names of persons whose addresses were unknown and who could not be contacted. There was, consequently, a great purge of the register in 1915 when many long obsolete entries were deleted.

The first extant medical register in the possession of the Medical Council of New Zealand was written up in November 1902. Before that time the only record is the copy of the register which was published annually in the New Zealand Gazette.

Qualifications

For persons who appear herein, all medical qualifications they are known to have held are given, even if obtained after registration and perhaps never registered in New Zealand. British qualifications are mostly abbreviated according to the custom of the period, but Oxford is called "Oxf" not "Oxon" and Cambridge is "Cam" not "Cantab".

In the Scottish Universities the original qualifying degree was Doctor of Medicine (MD). That was phased out after 1862 in favour of Bachelor of Medicine, Master of Surgery (MB CM) and MD then became a higher degree. The BM CM degree was in turn phased out after 1896 in favour of a double bachelor's degree (MB ChB). The Master of Surgery (mostly abbreviated ChM) then became also a higher degree. In Aberdeen, two degree-giving institutions, King's College and Marischal College, existed until 1860 when they were combined to form the University of Aberdeen. For Edinburgh graduates up to 1866 have included the titles of their graduation theses according to the official List of Graduates in Medicine in the University of Edinburgh, published in that year, since the book is extremely rare and the information is not otherwise easily available in New Zealand.

The Royal College of Surgeons of England (of London before 1844) had Members and Fellows. The Royal College of Physicians of London had Licentiates, Extra-Licentiates, Members and Fellows. The London conjoint examination, leading to the qualifications MRCS England, LRCP London, began in 1885.

The Society of Apothecaries, London, had only Licentiates (LSA London). When that was replaced by LMSSA (Licentiate in Medicine and Surgery of the Society of Apothecaries) that qualification was offered to those who held the LSA, so there are instances where both appear. The double qualifications, MRCS England, LSA London, were known as "College and Hall" (from the College of Surgeons and Apothecaries' Hall). They were the commonest joint qualifications for a general practitioner in the mid-nineteenth century.

In Edinburgh, the Royal College of Surgeons had Licentiates and Fellows. The Royal College of Physicians had Licentiates, Members (from 1861) and Fellows. There were Licentiates and Fellows of the Faculty of Physicians and Surgeons of Glasgow, which became a Royal Faculty in 1909 and is now a Royal College. The Scottish Triple Qualification, LRCS Edinburgh, LRCP Edinburgh, LFPS Glasgow, was introduced in 1884.

The King and Queen's College of Physicians of Ireland (KQCPI), named after joint sovereigns, William III Mary II, had Licentiates and Fellows. It became a Royal College (RCPI) in 1890. The Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland had Licentiates and Fellows. Apothecaries' Hall, Dublin, had only Licentiates (LAH). Apart from Trinity College, Dublin, which was the sole college in the University of Dublin, other universities in Ireland in Victorian times came and went. Queen's University (QUI) was ephemeral and the Royal University (RUI) became later the National University of Ireland (NUI).

The University of Melbourne established its medical school in 1862, the first in Australasia. The second was in the University of Otago, Dunedin, and began operations in 1875, teaching only the first two years of the then four-year course. Later it was expanded to a full course, so that students could, from 1887, graduate in medicine from the University of New Zealand, the degree-giving institution until 1961. The medical degree given by the University of New Zealand was initially Bachelor of Medicine (MB). A few years later the degree of Bachelor of Surgery (ChB) was added and was then offered ab initio to those who had graduated MB, but not all those eligible took advantage of the offer, presumably because a second bachelor's degree called for a second fee.

The Title of "Doctor"

In the second half of the nineteenth century, medical journals in Great Britain were engaged in a losing battle to restrict the title "Doctor" to those who held a university doctorate. Those who held bachelor degrees or college qualifications only, it was thought, should be called "Mister". These days, "Doctor" is used for all those who are qualified in medicine, regardless of qualification and that has always been the custom in New Zealand. It is a little reminiscent of the fight of surgeons to be called "Mister", although for many years all have been qualified as so-called doctors. That battle is also slowly being lost.

Often in the mid-nineteenth century, certainly in New Zealand, medical practitioners who held college qualifications only, signed the initials "M.D." after their names in official documents. I believe that this was done, in many cases, with no intention to deceive, but because those initials were considered to mean simply "qualified medical practitioner". The custom still holds in the United States, where all doctors are, in fact, MDs.

FORMAT OF ENTRIES

Entries in the alphabetical list of practitioners appear in the following order:

- 1 Surname and given names. All practitioners are dealt with under the surname by which they first registered in New Zealand with cross references to other names. That may cause confusion, particularly in the case of women well known by their married names but listed herein under maiden names. However, some convention had to be adopted and adhered to.
- 2 All known medical qualifications.

- 3 Date of registration in New Zealand. Unless otherwise stated, "Registered" (abbreviated to "Regd") means registered in New Zealand under the 1869 Act or subsequent statute.
- 4 Successive addresses on the medical register are separated by diagonal bars (/). Street addresses are usually ignored and towns or suburbs only are given. The address in the register was often wrong, if the practitioner had moved without notifying his or her change of address. Sometimes the address is replaced by the note "Left the colony" (rendered herein as "left NZ"). The year is given when that notation first appeared in the register. On other occasions, the address column is vacant and that appears herein as "no address".
- 5 Changes or variations in spelling of names. Nicknames by which the person was called, if other than routine, such as "Dick" for "Richard". If it is known that a second given name was the one used, that name is underlined in the main heading.
- 6 The advertised intention to apply for registration is given only when the town differs from the registered address, or if there was a long interval between advertisement and registration, usually due to the practitioner forgetting to make application for registration.
- 7 Biodata where known, career details and if relevant, information on registration in other countries. Gazetted appointments, such as those of public vaccinators or port health officers may give a clue to when people shifted their address or to the range of their practice.
- 8 The date of death if known or the date of removal from the medical register. Causes of death are mostly as given in death certificates, but "Consumption" and "Phthisis" or "Phthisis pulmonalis" are given as tuberculosis (TB).
- 9 References to obituaries or comments in medical journals or in books.
- 10 Known relationships to other registered or prominent people.

ALPHABET LIST OF MEDICAL PRACTITIONERS
who were in New Zealand between 1st January 1840 and 31st December 1930

Notes:

- 1 Names beginning with Mc- or M'- are listed alphabetically as though they began Mac-
- 2 When the name is written in capital letters:
 - a Names beginning with Mc- retain a small -c-: McKENZIE = McKenzie
 - b Names beginning with Mac- followed by a small letter are written entirely in capitals: MACKENZIE = Mackenzie
 - c Names beginning with Mac- followed by a capital letter are written with a small -ac- : MacKENZIE = MacKenzie
- 3 The name FitzHenry is the only one listed herein in which the prefix Fitz- is followed by a capital letter. That is capitalized as FitzHENRY
- 4 The name St George is listed alphabetically as though the first word was spelt out in full as Saint.
- 5 Herein, "educated" refers to schools or universities and "trained" means trained in medicine. "Retd" means retired and "resgd" means resigned.

PROVINCIAL REGISTRATIONS

Registrations under the New Munster Ordinance

This list records registrations under the Medical Practitioners Ordinance (NMO), passed in 1849 by the Legislative Council of the Province of New Munster, as found in the provincial gazettes. Places are as recorded in the gazettes and may be where they registered with a Resident Magistrate, rather than where they lived and practised. Names are listed by years and within each year in chronological order of the dates of registration which will be found in the main body of the work. Read across each line. Names appear more than once if the practitioner so registered.

Under the terms of the New Zealand Constitution Act passed in 1846 by the British Parliament, the country was divided into two parts, New Ulster in the north and New Munster in the south. The Otago and Canterbury areas had not then been settled, Nelson being the only settlement in the South Island. The division between the two provinces was a line running across the North Island from the mouth of the Patea River. Thus, at the time, the settled areas of Wanganui, Wellington and Nelson comprised New Munster. New Ulster did not introduce any comparable legislation, but although the two old provinces did not last their legislation continued to apply unless superseded in the new provinces.

FIRST COLONIAL REGISTRATIONS

Below are all registrations made under the Medical Practitioners Act 1867, before the act was superseded on 1st January 1870. Three registers were published in the New Zealand Gazette in 1868 and 1869: an interim one dated 29 April 1868, and two annual ones, dated 31 December of each year. Names from the three lists are combined. Those on the 1868 register who were not included in the 1869 register are noted. Where addresses or spelling of names differ in different registers, both versions are given, separated by a diagonal bar (/). Mostly, provinces are omitted from addresses.

St George and names beginning Mc are listed alphabetically, as they were at the time, not as in the body of the work, St under Sa- for Saint and Mc as though it was Mac
